This invention relates to a system which combines the natural forces of pendulum-like oscillation of a body, or a pendulum swing, and electrical energy to operate a back-and-forth motion of a rotating member. In particular, this invention provides a pendulum-swinging mechanism which is designed to operate off the gravitational and other natural forces produced by the rotation of the earth. Our present society is not only frantically consuming energy but is also becoming increasingly dependent upon the energy supplied by unstable sources, such as fossil fuel, nuclear fission or the like. The soil, water, atmosphere and other life forms around the world cannot be counted on to provide a constant supply of energy in the future. It is therefore desirable to create a system that will utilize natural forces in the form of gravity and other natural forces such as wind and water currents to generate a mechanical power which can be converted to a useful energy. Such an energy converting mechanism would be a great boon to the environment if it were to be implemented in a device that is simple, inexpensive, durable, and safe to operate. Pendulum swing mechanisms have been used in the past for various purposes. For example, pendulum swings have been used in clockwork mechanisms. In U.S. Pat. No. 1,569,109 issued to L. W. Nagle, a spring-wound clockwork mechanism is disclosed in which a pendulum is mechanically coupled to a crank which drives a clockwork mechanism. In U.S. Pat. No. 2,530,640 issued to A. J. Moll, a clockwork mechanism is disclosed in which a pendulum is secured directly to a crank shaft to operate a clockwork mechanism. A similar clockwork mechanism is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 3,741,736 issued to D. M. Reid, et al. It is desirable that pendulum swings be designed to operate in a safe, reliable and convenient manner
